Student Evaluations

ECON0100: Economic Inequality (Undergraduate)

Instructor (Part I): Michela Tincani

University College London

Part I, 2026/27 academic year.

AI-prepared summary:

Student feedback is strongly positive about Dr Tincani's clear explanations and engaging teaching. Students value her enthusiasm, opportunities for discussion, and practical exercises, including the cupcake demonstration of income and wealth inequality. Several comments highlight how research papers and empirical evidence connect economic concepts to practical applications and help students understand complex material.

Anonymous Evaluations:

It was very good. She teaches with a level of enthusiasm and interest that very few teachers/professors reach. She both seems very knowledgable in the subject matter but also a knack for inspiring and teaching the subject to students. She always has good energy and explains things very well.

I really enjoyed Dr Tincani's teaching this term, it is clear she is dedicated to the topics she teaches and prioritises ensuring students both understand and are engaging with the material. She explains fundamental concepts well and ensures they are built upon so we understand better.

It was probably the most interesting economics class I have taken during my undergradute studies. [...] I deeply appreciated the opportunity to learn about practical applications of econometrics concepts

Dr Tincani was a fantastic lecturer. She encouraged questions and discussion in lectures rather than just talking through slides, which made a complex topic much easier to follow. She explained the material clearly, linked the theory to real-world evidence on inequality,.

Lovely module! I enjoyed the interactive parts e.g cupcakes, the most. Very good teaching and makes the slides way more clear - worth coming to lectures :) thank you!!

Very engaging and interesting, especially with the embedded papers and research findings showing the practical applications of what we are learning. I enjoyed it a lot and would definitely do it again

Dr Tincani has been great at delivering the lectures in an engaging way such as through in class discussions and exercises - my favourite has been the practical exercise of visualising income and wealth inequality using cupcakes! She also breaks down concepts and explains research effectively

She provides very clear explanations of key concepts and I enjoy the interactivity of each lecture.

Great, I thought the lectures were engaging and thought provoking.

I really really enjoyed the course- from the content covered to the Dr Tincani's teaching style; Dr Tincani made it easier to understand the papers easily and at a good pace. It gave me a better understanding of how we can assess impacts and look at inequality from an economic perspective.

Very interesting and engaging

Really good and clear, with passion